THE SOCIETY OF PRINTERS

THE organization of THE SOCIETY OF PRINTERS was the natural outgrowth of the increasing attention which has been given in recent years to Printing as an art. Precedents in printing and modern phases of typography and design have been frequent subjects of public discussions, and have become of so much interest that when in the summer of 1904 the proposal was made to the Trustees of the Boston Public Library, that several lectures on printing and the allied arts be included in the next season's course at the Public Library, it was at once adopted. The four lectures of the course were largely attended and received with enthusiasm. As a result those especially interested formulated a plan for an organization which should bring together those attracted by the aesthetic side of printing. A committee consisting of Messrs. D. B. Updike, C. H. Heintzemann, Bruce Rogers, George French and Henry L. Johnson, was appointed to formulate plans and definite proposals for organization. The report of this committee was adopted and a formal organization effected on February 14, 1905. The form of constitution and organization with officers and committees as shown in the following pages, will indicate the first steps taken.

The purposes of the Society are primarily to benefit its own membership by discussions, by the encouragement of the study of printing as an art and by interchange of the results of such endeavors. It is also hoped that through publications, lectures and exhibitions, an influence will be exerted for stimulating the general interest in printing which is already becoming evident.

During the preliminary meetings, much enthusiasm was developed, and suggestions were made of many possible lines of usefulness for the Society. Mr. Henry Turner Bailey, for many years State Supervisor of Drawing in the public schools, called the attention of the Society to the increasing practice of preparing school papers in pamphlet form, the pupils making cover designs, title-pages, illustrations and simple forms of binding. As there is no adequate model for the sequence of pages, approved forms of copy and format, it was agreed that one of the most practical and important publications which could be prepared by this Society would be a rudimentary pamphlet on this subject. Mr. Bailey has been appointed editor of the proposed publication and the Council as a whole has taken charge of its printing and publication.

The Society will also publish a reference bibliography of the more important works relating to printing in the Boston Public Library, Boston Athenaeum and Harvard College Library. Many students of printing have found it difficult to search out such volumes and examples as are of the most immediate interest and value, and it is hoped that with the aid of this reference list these works will become much more readily accessible. This reference bibliography will be prepared under the direction of Mr. Otto Fleischner, Assistant Librarian of the Boston Public Library.

Plans are also under way for an exhibition of printing to be held early in 1906. It is intended that this exhibition shall consist of various phases of printing and of the allied arts which enter into the best modern printing. A loan exhibition of early printing will also be a feature.

A committee has been appointed to coöperate in the movement for Technical Education. Institutions having to do with industrial training have already considered plans for the introduction of courses in printing. It is intended that through this committee the Society shall exert its influence for increasing such instruction and advising in regard to its character.

Monthly meetings of the Society will be held throughout the year except during the summer season. Dates of meetings, topics to be discussed and lists of speakers will be sent to all members.
